Stryker Brigade prior to its deployment to Iraq. 20th Infantry. The 1st Battalion, 37th Field Artillery, also remained. Although that unit still had the mission of providing the brigade with fire support, it was expected to fill that role with three batteries of M198 155-mm. towed howitzers rather than the M109 self-propelled tracked howitzers it had earlier employed. An organic Reconnaissance, Surveillance, and Target Acquisition unit, the 1st Squadron, 14th Cavalry, was added to enhance the brigades ability to locate, acquire, and engage targets over a wide area of operations. This principal mission of this unit would be to build and maintain situational awareness for the entire brigade. In addition to its normal complement of three reconnaissance troops, the squadron included a military intelligence company known as the surveillance troop that pos-sessed an Unmanned Aerial Vehicle platoon; a Nuclear, Biological, and Chemical reconnaissance...
